Introduction

Achieve lower stock levels and increase stock turnover, while ensuring shipments to customers are on-time and in full by matching demand.

Today's technology empowers you to focus on your business, while simultaneously ensuring that you maintain the right amount of stock, office supplies and repair parts without over or under investing.

Taking stock

Managing stock effectively is important for any business because without enough stock, production and sales will grind to a halt. Stock control involves careful planning to ensure that the business has sufficient stock of the right product, at the right time.

An efficient stock control process will minimise the cost of holding finished stock, whilst ensuring that there are enough materials for production to continue and be able to meet customer demand. Stock control requires a delicate balance. You must carry enough stock to satisfy customer demands, yet overstocking can tie up valuable working capital, create inefficiencies and lead to write offs of yesterday's fads.

- How many times have you ordered something into stock that you already had sitting in your stores?
- Is older stock shipped before new stock?
- How often is the wrong item picked and shipped?
- Do you have to close down operations to simply count your stock each year?
- Do you have more staff than you need to manage all the paperwork your store has to handle?

Eradicate these type of issues with Stockade from Kelgray.

Taking greater control of your stock will make a huge difference to the way your business operates. Whether it's greater accuracy in picking and packing, improved cash-flow with faster billing, or faster access to up to date information and better reporting – maximising efficiencies with an improved stock control system will help your business make more money within existing resource levels.
